Hong Kong (21 January 2008) --- The winners of the Hong Kong ICT Awards 2007: Best Business Awards, organised by the Hong Kong Computer Society (HKCS), were announced today.

Mr Sunny Lee, President of HKCS, said, "it is evident from the number and level of awards that the quality of the entries is at an all time high."

"Hong Kong must never take its undoubted skills, talent and entrepreneurship for granted, and it is thus important that these awards should continue to provide an annual opportunity to reflect critically on the strengths and competitiveness of its ICT industry," he added.

The panel of judges is chaired by Professor Ng Ching Fai, President and Vice Chancellor of the Hong Kong Baptist University.

Mr Peter Yan, Chairperson of the Organising Committee reported that they have received 49 entries, a record high number of entries which include applications and products from various industry areas covering financial services, e-logistics, trading, tourism, retail, information security, open sources application, e-learning, industrial support and SME support.

"The selected outstanding applications and products which have subsisted through a meticulous and established examination of their functionality, effectiveness/efficiency, competitiveness, cost-performance, societal impact and innovative use of IT, are well-deserved winners of the Award in their respective industry areas," Mr Yan said.

The Hong Kong ICT Awards 2007 aims to recognise, promote and commend the excellent achievements to which the Hong Kong ICT professionals and organizations contribute. It is supported by the Office of the Government Chief Information Officer. There are seven award categories and the HKCS is the organiser of the "Best Business Award", formerly known as "IT Excellence Awards" established by the HKCS in 1998.
